The picture above is Brutus with his feline rescue friend, MacTabbish. His rescue story comes from a subscriber who is also one of our local librarians. She fosters dogs and cats, and she has several heartwarming stories of dog rescues.

Jess was living and working in Oregon when a huge wildfire spread over that area destroying thousands of homes. Two of her co-workers at the library actually lost their homes to the fire. Everyone in the area was told to evacuate. The local animal shelter evacuated their dogs to a horse barn at a fairground where they had to cram the dogs into small cages in order to have room for them all. They sent out an appeal for anyone who could provide better shelter for the animals. Jess stopped there on her way home to be greeted with a plea for her to take a dog that had been picked up as a stray and had been at the shelter quite awhile. No one else had claimed or wanted the dog. There were no volunteers to take it even temporarily. It was an emaciated pit bull that was filthy. It was drooling, shaking, and definitely nervous, but Jess was told it was both people- and dog-friendly, so she took him home. He got along well with her other animals, never made a mess in the house, didn't bark, and was so affectionate that by the second day, her husband told her they were keeping him. Brutus now lives happily with Jess, her husband, and other rescue dogs and cats as the resident couch potato.

Besides purchasing any of books in the Robin Kould and Mary Yen Rescue series (the profits from the sales of all of these books go to dog rescue), you can help rescue groups by fostering dogs and cats. Check with your local animal shelter for fostering opportunities and THeightsBooks.com for purchasing any Robin Kould and Mary Yen Rescue books. And, if you have a rescue story you'd like to share, I'd love to hear it.
